Bildung and Building. Can museums provide building blocks for Enlightenment in the 21st century?

SMK – Statens Museum for Kunst is the national gallery of Denmark, featuring more than 700 years of art. Many of the artworks are in the public domain due to age. When digitised, they can be freely re-used as raw materials for any purpose. At SMK, we experiment with turning digitised cultural heritage into building blocks, that enable new creativity, deeper engagement and more efficient learning.
